

July

– THE MONTH OF GROWTH –

“Every raindrop carries the promise of a new beginning.”

One day, a tiny seed lay hidden beneath the dry soil. It wondered why nothing was changing. Days passed, and then the first showers of July arrived. The rain soaked the earth, the sun smiled through the clouds, and the seed slowly began to grow. It realized that the rain it once feared had become the reason for its transformation.

Just like the seed, every child grows through new experiences, challenges, and opportunities. The month of July reminds us that learning is a journey. Every lesson, every activity, every achievement, and even every mistake helps us bloom into better individuals.

July teaches us that growth begins when we embrace change with courage and positivity.

“The beautiful thing about learning is that no one can take it away from you.”

— B. B. King

The Student Council Oath Ceremony was held to formally induct the newly elected council members into their leadership roles. They pledged to uphold the school's values, work selflessly for the welfare of students, and lead by example throughout the academic year.

Maitri-Setu
Let the holy stream of Friendship flow in my heart...

Bridge of Compassion Special

Break stereotypes. Build understanding. Plant compassion. Reap peace.

Small acts. Big ripple. Lasting change.

BE THE PERSON SOMEONE BELIEVES IN. GODNESS BEGAN.

COMPASSION ISN'T A FEELING, IT'S A CHOICE WE MAKE EVERY DAY.

LOOK BEYOND: See the person, not the label.
STEP FORWARD: One step from you can change someone's path.
CONNECT PEOPLE: There's more, become one.
LIFT TOGETHER: Your support can be their strength.
NURTURE KINDNESS: What if daily, which a grain.
BRIDGE CHANGE: Be the bridge someone else will cross.

Not just crossing over. Lifting others as we go.

The Quiet Power of Empathy in Times of War

*No border can divide a tear,
no language hides a cry,
for every war that rises loud,
it is humanity that asks why.*

War is often spoken of in numbers; territories lost, victories claimed, lives counted. But beyond these figures lies a quieter truth: every conflict breaks not just nations, but human hearts.

When tensions rise between countries like Iran and Israel, the world watches borders shift and power struggle. Yet, what often goes unseen are the ordinary people; families forced to leave their homes, children growing up with fear instead of dreams, and lives interrupted without warning.

This is where empathy becomes powerful. It reminds us that beyond politics and power, there are people just like us; hoping, fearing, and longing for peace. Empathy does not take sides; it takes a stand for humanity.

Even in a country like India, far from the battlefield, empathy matters. It shapes how we think, how we speak, and how we respond to the suffering of others. Instead of indifference, it teaches us understanding. Instead of anger, it encourages compassion.

Wars may divide lands, but empathy can still unite hearts. It is not loud or forceful, yet it has the strength to soften even the hardest realities.

Beyond the Battlefields

Wars are not just about soldiers or boundaries, weapons, strategy and strength. It is beyond all of these. Beyond the noisy and explosive battlefields lies a struggle which is unseen. War breaks peace not only outer peace but inner peace also. It can also be called the silent poison of Earth. Wars might end in a few years but its effects stay in the soil for decades.

Our India is known as a rising nuclear energy powerhouse. Jaduguda region of Jharkhand is also known as the "nuclear heart of India." It has the country's oldest uranium mines which have been providing the fuel for India's nuclear power and status for decades. But the people living nearby, many from the Santhal and tribal communities, share heartbreaking stories of what was against them.

A generation under shadow, many children in these areas are born with physical and mental challenges. This is our future, where our next generation is paying the price for the energy needs of today's generation. They live on the fault line between a nation's power and a village's pain. People there suffer from lung cancers and many other diseases. Soil and water nearby get contaminated. Families face mental stress, fear, and helplessness. Our rising nuclear power sector (India), this title being praised worldwide, but at what cost? To maintain this power, the cost is paid by our land itself.

We celebrate power, progress, and global recognition, but at what cost? If development silences voices and sacrifices lives, can we truly call it progress?

Beyond the battlefield, the real fight is for humanity, and it's a fight we cannot ignore. Beyond every battlefield, there are lives still fighting, and that is the war we must finally choose to see.

A Voice Without a Name

My name does not matter.
I am just one among millions: an ordinary person whose life has been quietly, yet completely, changed by war.

Before everything fell apart, my life was simple... and beautiful in its own small ways. Mornings began with the comforting warmth of tea shared with my family. The streets outside were always alive: shopkeepers opening their shutters, neighbours exchanging smiles, and children rushing to school with laughter in their voices. It was not a perfect life, but it was peaceful. And that was enough.

Then, one day, everything changed.
The morning did not begin with sunlight; it began with a siren.
A loud, terrifying sound cut through the silence, making my heart race in fear. Within moments, the ground trembled with distant explosions that seemed to grow closer with every second. The sky, once clear and blue, turned dark with smoke, as if even it was afraid.

I remember the panic:
People running without direction. Mothers clutching their children tightly. Voices calling out names that were lost in the noise. In just a few moments, the life we knew slipped away from us.

I am not a soldier. I do not hold weapons or fight battles. I am simply someone who wanted to live, to work, to laugh, and to return home safely at the end of the day. But war does not ask who we are. It does not choose. It enters without warning and leaves behind only fear and brokenness.

Homes that once held warmth are now silent ruins. Kitchens that smelled of food and love are reduced to dust. Chairs remain empty where families once sat together. Friends are separated, forced to leave everything behind, carrying only what their trembling hands can hold; and even less of what their hearts can bear.

Every night, we sleep with uncertainty.
And in the quiet darkness, a question echoes within me:
Why?
Why must innocent lives carry the weight of wars they never began?
Yet, even now, somewhere deep inside, a small flame of hope still burns.
I dream of mornings that begin with birdsong, not sirens.

Informing or Influencing? Media in War: A Bridge of Empathy

When a war begins, we come to know about it through our phones and televisions. There are breaking news alerts, loud headlines, and constant updates. For most of us, war is something we understand through the media. This makes us wonder: is the media informing us, or influencing us?

In India, the media is called the fourth pillar of democracy. Its job is to share true and responsible information. During war, this role becomes even more important because people depend on the news to understand what is happening.

At its best, the media becomes a bridge of empathy. It helps us see the human side of war; the struggles of families, the fear of children, and the courage of soldiers. It reminds us that behind every news story, there are real people. In this way, media connects us and helps us feel for others.

But sometimes, in the race to get attention, news becomes too dramatic. Loud debates, strong words, and emotional headlines can create fear and confusion. Instead of understanding, people may feel anxious. This is when the line between informing and influencing becomes unclear.

That is why media needs to show care, concern, and commitment. Care in choosing the right words, concern for people's feelings, and commitment to truth. When media follows these values, it helps people stay calm and informed.

We should also remember the hard work of journalists who report from difficult places. They bring real stories to us and help us understand the situation better.

In the end, media has a big responsibility. It can spread fear, or it can spread understanding. In times of war, it should act as a bridge; not just of news, but of empathy.

— Ronak L. Sathwani (Std. VII, GSEB-EM)

War Breaks Nations, Not Hearts

When loud bombs fall and people cry,
And dark smoke fills the broken sky,
It feels like hope is far away,
Like night has taken over day.
But even then, in times so hard,
Kindness stands up like a guard,
A helping hand, a caring smile,

Can make the pain less for a while.
People share what little they have;
They try to help, they try to save,
A small act can mean so much,
Just a kind word or a gentle touch.
War may break the land apart,
But it cannot break a kind heart,
Because even in the darkest hour,
Humanity still has its power.

LIGHT BAG INITIATIVE

To promote students' health and well-being, the timetable for Classes I to V was thoughtfully revised to reduce the weight of school bags.

The new schedule ensures that children carry only the required books each day, making their bags lighter and supporting a more comfortable and joyful learning experience.

Healthy Kids, Happy Kids!

BENEFITS

- Reduces physical strain on children
- Encourages better posture and health
- Helps children move freely and participate actively
- Creates a happy and positive learning environment

A lighter bag leads to happier hearts and healthier minds.
