The Smallest Gift

An inspiring story from the life of Mahatma Gandhi

During one of his journeys, Mahatma Gandhi was collecting contributions for the welfare of people who were poor and neglected. People came forward with money, jewellery and other valuable things.

Among the crowd was an old woman who had very little. She slowly came towards Gandhiji and placed a small coin in his hand.

Someone nearby suggested that such a tiny contribution was not worth keeping. But Gandhiji carefully accepted the coin and smiled.

"This may be a small gift in the eyes of the world," he said, "but it is precious because she has given what she could."

Gandhiji did not measure the gift by its value. He valued the love, sacrifice and gratitude behind it. He understood that a grateful heart does not ask, "How much did I receive?" It asks, "How much can I give?"

That little coin became a reminder that true gratitude is not expressed through wealth, but through a generous heart.

Moral:
Every gift becomes precious when it is given with love, and every grateful heart finds a reason to give.
